

DANCING CRANES

Like other members of their family, red-crowned cranes (Grus japonensis) are built for ostentatious courtship: long legs for dancing, long wing feathers for display, and an elongated coiled windpipe for amplifying their calls.

