

'Cavolo Nero'

Also known as 'Tuscan Kale', this traditional south Italian vegetable is widely available. It has a rich flavor, and should be cooked, steamed, or sautéed quickly to retain its dark green color. It can be used in all kinds of winter dishes, from soups and stews, to salads.

'Fizz'

This unusual kale grows quickly, producing fleshy leaves on upright stems. Harvest the tender young growth for summer recipes, adding it raw to salads, and using in stir-fries. Grow near the front of the kitchen garden for easy picking.

'Siberian, Dwarf Siberian'

'Siberian' kale is not for garnish. The tender, bluish-green, frilled leaves are excellent in salads when young, and even better steamed once they mature. Plants are 15–30 in (38–75 cm) in height and are extremely cold-hardy.
