

marshalling yard in the country, became the first one to be mechanized. In 2018, the railway junction as well as the yard were renamed after the Indian thinker Pandit Deendayal Upadhyaya, who was found dead near the Mughalsarai railway station in 1968.

▲ With the abolition of four-wheelers and introduction of through running, the Mughalsarai yard no longer “deals” with the wagons. Nevertheless, the scale of operations for freight trains interchanged with adjacent railways continues to be high. This image shows the yard before it was electrified.