

Between 1908 and 1920, in a concerted effort to organize the enterprise, many other changes were brought about, including appointments of Government inspectors, a chief engineer, and a financial adviser to the Railway Board. The Indian Railways was slowly on its way to becoming an organized industry.

▲ The Railway and Canal Traffic Act, Thomas Robertson's Report on the Administration and Working of Indian Railways, and the Indian Railways Act, 1890, together shaped the foundation of the Indian Railway Board.
