

THE AH WHEELER STORY

French businessman Emile Edouard Moreau and his friend AH Wheeler, both book lovers, were the men behind the popular AH Wheeler book stalls that dot stations across India. The first stall came up in Allahabad in 1874 or 1877 – the exact year is a matter of some debate – when Wheeler realized he had too many books to carry back with him to London. Ever resourceful, Moreau decided to cash in on the new trend of upper-class passengers reading books to keep themselves occupied on train journeys. He offered to sell Wheeler's books from a wooden almirah at the station. Till 2004, the company had exclusive rights to sell books on railway stations in many parts of the country.

An AH Wheeler Bookstall at Victoria Terminus, Bombay