

1921–1938

The railways had found their rhythm with the Government focus on consolidation and refining policies. Yet, this period was marked by upheaval, as the cries for freedom became more strident and nationalists sought to incorporate the railways into their struggle for Independence. Amid all this was the Depression and the rumblings of another World War, one that promised to be far worse than the first.

“At every station ... large crowds surrounded our compartment. They flooded us with flowers and food and tried to show ... that they appreciated the sacrifices that the leaders were making to win Swaraj for the people.”

KRISHNA NEHRU HUTHEESING, WITH NO REGRETS: AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY (1943)