

CHANGE OF POWER

By the end of 1920, even though the British Government in India owned a major part of the railways in the country, it managed and operated but a small share. A majority were run by private companies, the practices of which were fast becoming a subject of widespread public criticism. A strong public debate pushed for direct management of the railways by the Government, and a committee was set up to oversee the matter and recommend changes as necessary.