

▲ During the freedom movement, railway stations became key instruments in the symbiotic relationship between the freedom fighters and the masses. Apart from being political spaces for mass mobilization, stations witnessed huge crowds of people, who would wait tirelessly in the hope of catching a glimpse of their heroes. Seen here is Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi looking out from his compartment at the crowd at a railway station in 1940.