

THE EARLY PROPOSALS

The genesis of railways in the Indian subcontinent is hard to pinpoint as it began long before the tracks for the first line were laid. Though proposals and schemes did not materialize immediately, they did set the stage for the introduction of rail technology. The first train that ran – in 1853 – was a result of more than two decades of discussions, deliberations, and proposals.