

MODERN ELECTRIFICATION

The process of electrification started in the 1920s in Bombay, Madras, and the Western Ghats with the conversion of 388 km of tracks. The process came to a standstill with World War II, the freedom movement, and later, Partition. The growing requirement for quick and efficient freight transport made it the need of the hour.