

improving the staff's job knowledge, conducting regular inspections, and introducing modern technical safety and signalling aids. The 1968 Wanchoo Committee in its report, while re-emphasizing the Kunzru Committee's recommendations, placed in perspective some failures that may have occurred while managing such a vast network. The Sikri Committee in 1978 was appointed to review the implementation of these suggestions to inspect the existing safety regulations in place, and provide additional recommendations. With an increased focus on safety, the Indian Railways was successful in reducing the number of mishaps.
