

▲ Meals served on trains and stations are sourced from IRCTC's "base kitchens", which are equipped with modern amenities. Seen here is an IRCTC employee carrying hygienically packed food in a food cart from the base kitchen in New Delhi.

Food on the go

Prior to the advent of IRCTC, railway passengers had to disembark at stations and rely on food available. Often, the quality of food at the stations was dubious but passengers, mainly those travelling considerable distances, had little choice. The IRCTC rapidly took over departmental and staff catering from 2001 and completely revamped the facility. It built the required infrastructure, such as mega base kitchens, food courts and food plazas, and injected order into the system.