

CITY CONNECTIONS

Intracity transport has always struggled to keep up with expanding urban areas and growing populations by constantly improvising and upgrading its transport facilities. The metro rail projects across India's metropolitan cities have tried to do exactly that and have revolutionized everyday travel, so much so that life in many cities is unimaginable without this service.

For the people living in Delhi and the NCR, the metro service is a lifeline. It helps people travel across the city in safe and comfortable conditions.

Author and railwayman MA Rao in his book Indian Railways argues that the rapid industrialization that followed India's Independence was not uniform across all regions, with the four metropolitan cities of Delhi, Kolkata, Chennai, and Mumbai witnessing far more rapid development. It was inevitable that people from different parts of the country converged on these cities in search of employment, which in turn led to a surge in their populations. Soon, the strain on public transport was visible with limited road capacity and inadequate bus services.
