

makes it older than the Fairy Queen, which is also known by its locomotive number, EIR 22.

The Express seems to have a knack for being mired in controversies. In 1953, the Indian Railways issued a stamp to celebrate the enterprise's centennial year. The postage stamp is supposed to be a representation of the first train journey from Bori Bunder to Thana, hauled by the three steam locomotives: Sindh, Sultan, and, Sahib. No known photograph of that maiden train journey exists, and any pictorial representation of that trip should have three engines. Instead, the stamp showed a single locomotive on it, which is incorrect, and is, in fact, the EIR 21.

▲ The refurbished EIR 21 getting ready to run the Heritage Special Service to commemorate India's Independence.