LORD DALHOUSIE (1812–60)

The Governor-General from 1847 to 1856, Lord Dalhousie was the youngest man to be appointed to the post. During his tenure, he focussed on boosting the transportation and communication systems in India. His Minutes on the railways are crucial in understanding the development of the network. He also instituted telegraph lines, promoted the completion of the Grand Trunk Road between Calcutta and Delhi, and began a central postal system.
