

▲ A train pulls into an unidentified station in this photograph from 1867. Earlier stations were mostly functional structures with basic facilities for travellers. Over time, these evolved into elaborate buildings with English, Italian, or Greek architectural influences.