

Food

Types of food

Rice is a staple food for Southern Asia and parts of Africa.

Grains of wheat

Wheat is a staple in North America, Europe, Australia, and parts of Asia.

Bread made with wheat flour

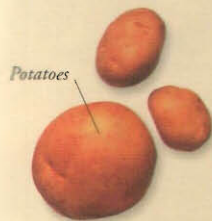

Maize

Maize (corn) is a staple food in some African, Asian, and American countries.

Tortilla chips

Starchy roots are a good source of carbohydrate.

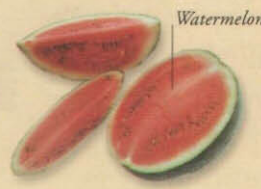

Vegetables are an important source of vitamins.

Pulses (beans and peas) are rich in protein.

Nuts and seeds can be pressed to make oils.

Fruits are an important source of vitamins.

Sugars and honey sweeten food.

Meat is a major protein source.

Fish and shellfish are a low-fat protein source.

Eggs are a valuable source of protein.

Milk and milk products provide protein and important minerals.

Fats and oils store energy.

Spices and herbs add flavour to a meal.

Australia: meats grilled out-of-doors on a barbecue

India: vegetable curry and roti (wheat bread)

Prawns

Spain: paella, rice simmered with chicken, seafood, and spices

France: bouillabaisse, fish soup, served with bread

Salad

Mexico: burrito, a pancake with chilli, meat, beans

Vietnam: spring rolls filled with pork, prawns, noodles

Morocco: chicken baked with spices

Japan: sushi, extremely fresh, raw fish, with rice and seaweed

United States: pork ribs with black-eyed peas

China: roast duck with an aromatic seasoning

Italy: fettucini, a kind of pasta, in a tomato sauce

Thailand: pad thai, Thai fried noodles

United Kingdom: roast beef, gravy, and roast potatoes

Russia: borscht (beetroot soup) with blinis (pancakes)