

DIVING SABRE

A diving North American F-86 Sabre jet fighter fires rockets at a target range at Nellis Air Force Base, Nevada, around 1953. Sabres were not equipped with rockets or missiles when taking on MiGs during the Korean war. As in World War II the air battles were fought with guns, although combat took place at the higher speeds made possible by jet engines.