

FENRIR

THE FEARSOME GOD-KILLER

Fenrir (“he who dwells in marshes”) is an enormous wolf with blazing eyes – but he’s not a mindless monster. Fenrir is clever and can speak to the Aesir. Fearing Fenrir, the gods chained him up, and from his mouth pours a river of spit called “Expectation”.

PARENTS: Loki and Angrboda (a giantess)

CHILDREN: believed to be Sköll and Hati

SIBLINGS: Jörmungandr and Hel

OTHER WOLVES

SKÖLL

Sköll (which means “treachery”) pursues the Sun across the sky – he’ll swallow it at Ragnarök.

HATI

Hati (“he who hates”) chases the Moon. Like Sköll, he’ll consume his prey at Ragnarök.

GERI AND FREKI

This wolf pair belongs to Odin, and they accompany him everywhere. Both their names mean “greedy”.

FENRIR'S FATE

Fenrir is destined to break from his chains and run amok at Ragnarök. During that epic struggle, this great wolf will fight and slay Odin, and in turn be killed by Vidar, the All-Father’s vengeful son.
