

The Duel of Hrungnir and Thor

The Sun blazed over Asgard like a polished bronze shield. Most of the Aesir were idling in the heat, but Odin felt restless...

“I must plot, learn and take advantage of others to further the Aesir’s cause,” he brooded.

“Otherwise we’ll be unprepared when Ragnarök comes.” So he mounted eight-legged Sleipnir and rode out to spy on the Frost Giants.

Upon emerging from a forest deep in Jotunheim, Odin found the road blocked by an enormous figure. “O-ho!” the giant rumbled. “I’ve been watching you ride from afar, little man. Your horse flies over the land like a bird!”

“Sleipnir’s faster than any horse from your realm, I’d wager my head on it!” Odin replied, annoyed at being called “little man”.
