

Thor decided to take a look inside the giant's bag, but no matter how hard he tried, he couldn't undo the knot. Red-faced with rage, the Thunder God struck Skrymir on the head with Mjölhnir. But the giant merely sat up and said, "Did a leaf just land on me?" before going back to sleep.

Skrymir's snores rolled around the valley like thunder, until Thor could stand it no longer. "I need my beauty sleep!" he bellowed before once again bringing Mjölhnir crashing down onto the giant's head.

But Skrymir only said, "I think an acorn just landed on me," and drifted into a doze.

"Argh!" Down again came Mjölhnir, and this time Thor put every ounce of his strength into the blow, so that the clang of metal striking bone scared all the birds from the oak tree.

"Strange," Skrymir muttered, opening one eye. "I think a twig might have fallen on me."

It came as a relief – especially for Thor – when Skrymir went off on his own, leaving the companions to continue in peace.

After a time, they found themselves staring up at the imposing towers and ramparts of a castle called Utgard.

The travellers arrived at Utgard.

