

Everything that begins has to end – day turns to night, summer gives way to winter, green leaves fade to brown. The Norse applied this understanding of life and death to their gods. The Norse gods are not immortal. They can be hurt and even killed.

Ragnarök – the gods' inevitable doom – hangs ever over them like a storm-cloud, casting a shadow they can never entirely ignore.