

The rolling sea dislodged Naglfar, the black ship made from the fingernails of the dead. This vessel of doom sailed over the flooded earth, crewed by Loki and the Frost Giants. Spears and swords they held, as they sang songs of vengeance.

The sky, once Ymir's skull, split open with a deafening crack.

Fire and smoke surged through the gap, followed by the fearsome giants of Muspelheim and their king, Surt. Their beards were black, their skin smelled of sulphur, and their hearts burned with hatred for the Aesir. Heimdall blew Gjallarhorn when he saw this army of giants crossing Bifrost, and his heart broke as the bridge collapsed behind them. Alerted by the horn, Odin sought advice from Mimir, then gathered the Einherjar – the spirits of brave warriors who have fallen in combat. The rest of the gods entered the battlefield, known as Aigrid, for this last desperate fight.

