

Thunder roared and lightning flashed as the Aesir and Jotunn met. Odin hurled Gungnir and it sunk deep into Fenrir's shoulder, who howled as he leaped forward and swallowed the All-Father. Cries of woe rose from the Aesir. Vidar, seeing his father's death, propped Fenrir's mouth open with a magical shoe and plunged a sword into his throat. The mighty wolf's eyes rolled in their sockets and he died in a fountain of blood.

Elsewhere, one-handed Tyr fought Garmr, the blood-stained wolf that guarded the gates of Niflheim.

Wolf and god locked together in combat, and both died.

Heimdall and Loki fought. They slashed and stabbed until they were mortally wounded. Surt and Freyr clashed and met their ends in a flurry of flaming blades.