

The Sun and the Moon

*The cosmos was complete: the Nine Worlds lay in the branches and roots of Yggdrasil.
Yet darkness covered all.*

So Odin made the Moon, and it cast out a silver light.
Next came the Sun – created from the sparks that flew from Muspelheim. Odin placed this golden light in a chariot, pulled by two horses: Arvak and Alsvinn.

Odin cast the Sun and Moon into the sky and each day they circled the heavens, lighting the cosmos.

Later, a man called Mundilfari had two children. They were so beautiful that he called the girl Sol, after the Sun, and the boy Mani, after the Moon.
