

The Mead of Poetry

*Kvasir was loved by all the gods.
Formed from the spittle of the Aesir and the Vanir, he symbolized their new friendship.*

Kvasir was the wisest being – there was no question he couldn't answer. Kvasir was also very generous, and enjoyed travelling the land and helping people solve their problems. One day, two black-bearded dwarfs called Fjalar and Galar invited him to supper. Unfortunately, Fjalar and Galar were evil and they killed poor Kvasir, drained his blood into three cauldrons and mixed it with honey.

This created a liquid called the Mead of Poetry, which turned whoever drank it into a brilliant poet.
