

Without his horse's help, the stranger couldn't finish the wall in time and, certain that the Aesir gods had somehow tricked him, flew into a violent rage. At that moment, Thor appeared and crushed the stranger's head with his hammer. And so the Aesir gods could rest easy once more.

A few months later Loki emerged from the forest, in human form. With him was a magnificent eight-legged horse called Sleipnir – the result of the union between the mare and Svadilfari.

*"A gift for you, Odin!" he cried.
"I trust I am now forgiven?"*

And so Odin forgave Loki, and was happy to take Sleipnir as his steed.
