

A stylized illustration of Sif's golden hair, which is depicted as a long, thick, braided rope. The hair is a vibrant yellow-gold color. It starts at the top left, where a woman's head (Sif) is partially visible, and extends down the left side of the page. The background is a deep green, decorated with a repeating pattern of golden wheat stalks. The hair itself has a textured, braided appearance. The overall style is modern and graphic.

Sif's Golden Hair

Sif was the goddess of the earth, crops and fertility, and the wife of Thor. She was known for her long hair, as golden as a wheatfield.

One night, as Sif lay in slumber, the trickster god Loki came by. True to his nature, Loki seized his chance to make mischief and he stole up on poor Sif and cut off her hair with a hunting knife.

Next morning Sif woke up and was horrified to find her hair lying in long, tangled tresses on the floor.

She cried out in horror, and wept and wept... and wept. Rain fell in torrents from the heavens, and the people below looked up and wondered what had happened to so upset the gods.

When Thor returned home that evening Sif hid in the shadows because she didn't want her husband to see her shorn scalp. Thor called out to her, and finally she came and stood before him. The God of Thunder stared at her in disbelief and then let loose a mighty roar – he knew only one god was capable of such a cruel act: Loki. Once again, the people looked up at the stormy skies, this time with fear in their hearts.