

Thor lost no time. He descended on Loki, threatening to break every bone in his body. At first the trickster god denied everything, but he soon saw that the game was up. He admitted his crime, and vowed to put things right.

And so Loki journeyed deep down under the earth to Svartalfheim – home of the dwarfs. They were skilled miners and metalworkers and Loki visited the best of them all – the Sons of Ivaldi. Cunning Loki used flattery to appeal to the dwarfs, saying that only they possessed the skill to spin gold as fine as Sif's beautiful hair. In return, he said, they would get the eternal gratitude of Sif and Thor. Suitably flattered, the dwarfs agreed to the task.

After weeks of careful spinning, the dwarfs created a cap of the finest golden hair.

Loki took the golden cap, said his farewells and travelled back to Asgard. He placed the cap on Sif's head, while Thor glared at him, holding his hammer aloft... Luckily for Loki it was a perfect fit, and Sif was overjoyed. Miraculously, her new hair continued to grow and was just as long and full and golden as it had ever been.

Sif's hair was the colour of golden wheat.
