

A large, dark blue serpent with a pattern of small triangles along its body and a row of sharp black spines along its back. It has a long, thin tail and a head with a single orange eye and a wide, toothy mouth. The serpent is coiled around the text, with its head at the top left and its body winding around the right side and bottom. The background is a light blue sky with white clouds and a darker blue sea with white bubbles.

Hymir rowed to his favourite fishing spot, where he caught two whales. “These should keep us going for a while,” he said.

“Mere minnows,” Thor replied, taking hold of the oars. “Let’s find a bigger fish!”

Further and further Thor rowed, until the shoreline disappeared and there was nothing to see but sea. “We should go back,” Hymir said. “These are Jörmungandr’s waters.”

“I know,” Thor replied, and he threw a rope with the bull’s head attached over the side.

Feeling a tug on the line, Thor heaved until the ghastly face of Jörmungandr broke the surface – but the terrified Hymir cut the rope before Thor could kill it.

Thor howled as Jörmungandr sank beneath the waves, and in his anger pushed Hymir overboard. As the water closed over his head, the unfortunate giant decided it had been a bad decision to invite Thor in for supper.