

“Why aren’t you joining in the fun, friend Hodr?”

“I’d like to, but no one will help me aim at Baldr,” Hodr replied. “Also, I have no weapon to use.”

“Here, take this mistletoe,” Loki said. “Let me guide your aim... That’s it... Now, fire!”

The mistletoe changed in mid-air into a deadly sharp arrow and pierced Baldr’s heart.

All the gods – apart from Hodr who couldn’t see and Loki who didn’t care – cried out as Baldr dropped to the floor, dead as stone.

Frigg bent over her beloved son’s body and wept. Odin and the gods stared into the distance in shock and disbelief. They knew what this meant: Ragnarök.

Frigg wept over Baldr’s dead body.

