

In the morning, when Freya discovered the theft of her necklace, she was distraught. She sought out Heimdall. “Can you use your far-sight to find it?” she begged.

Shielding his eyes from the Sun, Heimdall slowly turned on the spot until he spied a seal swimming in the sea. It had a fiery necklace around its neck. Heimdall knew at once that the seal was none other than the shapeshifter, Loki.

Heimdall travelled to the coast, turned himself into a seal as well, and swam out to where Loki frolicked in the waves.

The two seals fought for hours – biting, slapping and striking until, bloodied and exhausted, Loki gave up the necklace and retreated to lick his wounds.

“I’ve got a nasty feeling Loki and I will fight again,” Heimdall thought as he journeyed back to Asgard, grasping his magnificent prize.

