

So, Freya lent Loki her falcon feathers and he used them to fly to Thrymheim. There, high up in the mountains, he found Idun alone and miserable. Loki wasted no time – he turned Idun into a nut, picked her up and flew back towards Asgard. But Thjazi spotted them and gave chase in eagle-form.

The Aesir saw Loki diving towards the walls of Asgard with Thjazi close behind, so they built a huge bonfire. Nimble Loki flew over the inferno, but Thjazi was too slow and crashed to the ground, feathers aflame.

Thor took hold of his mighty hammer, Mjölnir, and finished the giant off. Loki slunk away until tempers cooled.

Idun handed out her fruit and the Aesir got back their youth and immortality.
