

“Behold, Thunder-home!” Skadi declared after leading Njord high up into the snowy peaks. “Breathe the frigid air! Behold the icy-blue sky! Rejoice at the peaceful isolation!”

But Njord hated the place and wandered unhappily through Thunder-home’s chilly halls – he felt lonely, and the howls of the wolves kept him awake at night.

Nine days later, Njord took Skadi to his home, Noatun – which means “place of boats”.

“Breathe the salty air!” he cried. “Behold the rolling blue waves! Rejoice at the teeming birds!”

But Skadi hated Noatun and sulked among the sand-dunes – it was too hot, and the noisy gulls disturbed her sleep.

“Njord,” she said. “We need to talk.”

The giantess and the god decided that they would never be happy together, and they separated to live in their preferred homes.

