

USING HOSTAS

Dense, overlapping hosta leaves make useful ground cover. These plants thrive in shade, with bright variegated forms adding a splash of color. They are ideal for planting at the edge of woodland or beneath larger shrubs.

Pots of hostas of contrasting sizes, leaf colors, and shapes add a cool elegant note to a shady patio display.

Bright variegated hostas, such as 'Patriot', combine well with astilbes, ferns, and lady's mantle in shady beds and borders in a cottage garden.

Hostas thrive beside ponds and streams and, although shade-lovers, they will tolerate more sun where the soil is reliably damp in summer.
