

Plants for fall leaves

While bulbs lift the spirits in spring, vibrant foliage color provides the perfect finale to the drama in the garden come fall.

The stars of the fall show are maples, which sport sculptural leaves that turn startling shades of crimson and orange before falling. Place them in a focal point in a lawn or bed to create a seasonal focal point. House walls and garden fences can also be set ablaze with the scarlet foliage of Boston ivy and crimson glory vine, which make a beautiful backdrop to container displays on a patio or seasonal beds. Contrast these bright reds with the warm, buttery tones of birch and hydrangea leaves and burnished bronze hornbeam and beech.

TREE MEDIUM

Acer japonicum* 'Vitifolium'
FULL MOON MAPLE A bushy deciduous shrub or tree ideal for the back of a bed, it produces large maple-shaped leaves and drooping red flower clusters in spring. In fall, the leaves turn purple, crimson-red, and orange.

TREE SMALL

Acer palmatum* 'Atropurpureum'
JAPANESE MAPLE A dainty tree, with lobed, purple-red tinged summer foliage. Shelter, dappled shade, and moisture-retentive soil encourage the fiery red fall display and prevent leaf scorch.

TREE SMALL

Acer palmatum* 'Nicholsonii'
JAPANESE MAPLE This is an elegant, arching tree with long, finely pointed, deeply lobed leaves. The foliage is purple-red in spring and turns green in summer. In fall, it makes a dazzling show of yellow, orange, and red.
