

PLANTS for COLOR and SCENT

Scent and color affect our moods and perceptions and they can be used to great effect in the garden.

Try planting lavenders close to seating, where the fragrance will help soothe frayed nerves, or use pastel colors, which produce a similar calming effect.

Conversely, bright reds and oranges are stimulants, and help to energize planting schemes, as well as acting as focal points. You can also mimic wider landscapes, where colors pale as they extend toward the horizon, giving an illusion of distance.
