

USING IRISES

Irises flower from late winter to early summer and provide elegant forms and color in many parts of the garden. Plant the bulbs in fall and rhizome-forming plants in fall or spring.

Bold drifts of bearded irises create a naturalistic effect in a border teamed with late-flowering Oriental poppies.

Water irises make perfect pond-side plants. The white-striped foliage of I. laevigata 'Variegata' (above) prolongs the season of interest well after the summer flowers have faded.

Bearded irises add glamor to large containers filled with gritty free-draining soil and will flower every year if fed annually in spring.
