

Lemurs and monkeys

Monkeys and lemurs, along with the apes, make up the mammal group known as primates.

Howler monkey

Record-breaker

Talking to each other is important to primates, which live together in large groups. The howler monkey, the loudest land animal on Earth, screams to neighbouring groups, and can be heard several miles away.

Ring-tailed lemur

Monkey business

Most people think monkeys all look similar, but some are quite different.

White-faced saki: the male is black and the female brown.

Tamarin: the golden lion tamarin has gold fur and a long mane.

Woolly monkey: it lives in South America and has thick fur.

Proboscis monkey: this male monkey has a very long, prominent nose.

Monkeys

Monkeys have grasping hands so they can climb trees. Many have recognizable features, such as this tamarin's white moustache.

The emperor tamarin has a long, white moustache.

weird or what?

Japanese macaques, a type of monkey, live in the mountains of northern Japan. To keep warm in the winter, they take baths in the hot volcanic springs.

Lemurs

Lemurs are only found on the island of Madagascar, in the Indian Ocean. They have thin bodies and often move by jumping along on their back legs. Sitting upright with its hands on its knees, this ring-tailed lemur is sunbathing.