

Hoofed mammals

A hoof is a certain type of foot with a hard covering. Hoofed mammals are found all over the world.

Wild pigs

Pigs are hoofed mammals that eat almost anything. Wild pigs are speedy runners and protective of their little, stripy babies.

Different hoofs

A hoofed foot has a hard case, like a big toenail, around each toe for strength. Hoofed feet are good for fast running.

Horse: a horse has only one toe surrounded by a hoof. It runs on tiptoe.

Rhinoceros: these large-hoofed mammals have three toes.

Camel: the camel has two toes that are widely spaced for walking on sand.

The tapir

Tapirs have very long noses and look like pigs, but they belong to a different hoofed family.

On bended knee

The warthog is a long-legged, African pig. When it feeds, it kneels on its wrists.

Malaysian tapir

Quick, duck!

Tapirs spend much of their time in the water. When threatened, they sink under water leaving their noses poking above the surface like a snorkel so they can breathe.

The nose and upper lip form a trunk.
